MAKE YOUR LYCHEES A BIG SUCCESS

Holmes Lychee come into bud in February, with fruit ripe for picking from mid-June to mid-July. Trees normally come into bearing in the 4th year. In general, Lychees are as hardy as orange trees, and require about the same care:

Plant in full sun for best growth, most fruit, although locations where less than half shaded will do almost as well.

Location should be naturally moist or accessible to frequent watering to maintain moisture, and must be well drained.

Require abundant moisture at all times, even more than citrus, because of their greater leaf spread.

Additional watering is required during fruiting season, from February to July.

Soil cannot be too rich, organically. Make a mixture of your choicest top soil, half and half with Holmes Dyna-Gro to provide enriched organic feeding and retain moisture. In localities where Holmes Dyna-Gro is not available, use mixtures of rotted leaves or dairy, half and half with your choicest top soil and composted peat, marl or clay.

Mulch top of soil around plant with 3 to 5 inches of leaves over an underlayer of Holmes Dyna-Gro or German peat moss.

Fertilize same as Orange trees. Use highest grade fertilizer formulas; however due to greater leaf spread, should be fertilized heavier, particularly during fruiting period.

Protect from heavy frosts. Lychee appear to be as hardy as orange trees, should be given same protection.

Free of all types of Nematodes. There are still no known diseases that effect Lychee in Florida.

Be Sure to Keep Moist at All Times

Lychee respond vigorously to heavy fertilizing and watering. Holmes has grown Lychee in his Nursery for over 20 years, and often fruits trees in their third year, produce consistent BIG CROPS.
